Title:

Written in the Stars

Jason Blackschleger

Aster (25), a journalist, is arguing on the phone with someone to get a longer repayment period. He mentions that he doesn't have much to sell, next to him is an expensive telescope and other equipment. He hangs up and puts his hands over his face.

After finding no financial support from friends and family, he puts his telescope on Craigslist.

In the evening, he drives to a viewing area near Cherry Springs State Park. There is a star shower that evening and the sky is barely cloudy. Aster looks for a suitable place to set up his telescope one last time.

At this moment, Ella (25) rolls past Aster from a little higher up and knocks over his telescope. After a discussion in which Ella explains her clumsiness and Aster sees that his equipment is damaged, Ella offers to buy it from him.

The next day, Aster is in his newspaper office. But things are not going well for him as a journalist at the moment, he is hardly getting any assignments and his boss is giving him a telling-off. With the money Aster received for the telescope, he can only pay a fraction of his debts.

He has a few wads left over and to take his mind off things, he visits the planetarium a few days later. Just as he is about to leave, he notices Ella standing in front of the ticket office. He decides to speak to her. Ella recognizes him and the two of them leave the planetarium.

Aster and Ella talk to each other while walking through the city. Ella turns out to be the daughter of the owner of the planetarium and is supposed to take it over one day. However, her passion lies in writing and her dream is to pitch a manuscript.

They end their walk in front of a bar, as Ella is recognized by friends and, after some persuasion, goes out to party with them. After Aster and Ella exchange contact information, Aster makes his way home.

Days later, Ella has a bad day helping out at the planetarium. She gets into an argument with her father, leaves the building in a rage and pulls out her cell phone. The first person she sees in her contacts is Aster, whom she calls.

A week later, Ella is downstairs at the reception of Aster's office building. She asks for him and his team leader, as Aster has given her the chance to start in the creative corner for the newspaper.

The two decide to go out for a meal together after work. As Ella is very grateful for the opportunity to write, she offers in return to take Aster to an observatory where she knows the director personally.

In a montage, we see how Aster and Ella get closer and, over time, begin a relationship.

Ella is getting happier because she can write, but her texts are not yet getting enthusiastic feedback, which makes her doubt herself. Nevertheless, there are some enthusiastic comments from two readers in surveys.

Aster meets with the director of the observatory (Nick, 47). Since Aster only has stargazing as a hobby and no professional experience, Nick is a little skeptical, and Aster has a bad feeling as he had hoped for a job offer.

Aster is sitting at home and receives a phone call, Nick offers him a deal to write scientific texts.

When he leaves his apartment, there are some men standing there who belong to the group who want money from Aster. They beat him up and Aster lies next to the entrance for a while.

Ella arrives unannounced and finds Aster injured. Panicked, she brings him into the apartment and tends to him. Aster tells her about his money problems. They spend the night together.

Ella's contract for creative writing is coming to an end. Aster motivates her to finally turn one of her stories into a novel. She starts writing a manuscript from start to finish.

Aster is at the observatory, he has a text message from Ella and friends, asking if he is once again just studying the night sky all night and not going home. He doesn't read these messages, but concentrates fully on his work.

Ella is in a third interview with a publisher, the interviewer makes her nervous, and although it sounds like negative feedback at first, she lands the deal.

The book is a success and overnight Ella becomes a big up-and-coming author, her book is advertised and she gives autograph sessions.

Aster is out to lunch with Nick, who tells him about a well-paid job at an astronomy magazine in Cambridge, MA. Nick says that the magazine belongs to a friend of his and that he recommended Aster for the job. Aster happily accepts.

After Aster and Ella haven't seen each other for a while and have been distant for some time, they talk at the dinner table. The atmosphere is cold and they argue when Aster tells her about the new job. After they realize that their feelings for each other are disappearing, they break up.

Aster is now in Cambridge, and after months of writing articles and researching, he is helping the research partners of his magazine to discover a new comet.

Although he is not a scientist, but only writes, he is listed as a contributor and is given part of the prize money.

The head of the group who wants money from Aster opens his letterbox and finds the rest of the money Aster owes in an envelope.

Ella and Aster haven't spoken to each other for a year. Ella is seen at a bookstore launching her highly anticipated second novel. She is asked about inspiration, and she implies that her last relationship was a big influence.

When the show is over, she sees the magazine that Aster works for. In an article about the discovery of the comet is the name "Ella's Comet".
